It is a great pleasure to greet you—graduating students, friends and family—as we celebrate the Department of Communication's 2020 graduating class—virtually.

We celebrate, even in the midst of the most serious global health and economic crisis that has occurred in many generations. We celebrate the kind of individual and collective work and sacrifices that brought you thus far and that will carry you, and all of us, through this moment.

You will notice in this commemorative commencement document that this year we have one hundred sixty five graduates, including six doctoral candidates, and one candidate for the Master of Arts degree. Over fifty members of our undergraduate students are graduating with highest distinction, or distinction, and four have been inducted into Phi Beta Kappa, the nation's oldest and most honored college honorary society. One student will be graduating with High Honors. In the Cultural Studies major, housed in the department, there is also one student graduating with High Honors.

As faculty members, we take seriously our mission to nurture students and provide them with the critical capacities that will hold them in good stead in the years to come. For us, commencement is the tangible expression and celebration of everything that we hold dear as a department and as a global public research university that cherishes the transformative power of a liberal arts education.

On behalf of my colleagues, I want to extend my sincere congratulations to the Department of Communication's graduating class of 2020. We are proud of each one of you, and look forward to hearing news of your accomplishments in the years to come.

Patricia Parker
Department Chair

Message from the Director of Graduate Studies

Each year, the Department of Communication and the Graduate School of the university recognize students who have committed years of their lives to expand our understanding of the ways communication and culture shape and might be used to reshape the lives of individuals and society. The pursuit of a graduate degree in Communication evinces a passionate faith in the importance of producing and sharing the best knowledge possible, in the hopes of contributing to society's futures. Under even the best of circumstances, completing the rigorous demands of graduate studies requires an extraordinary commitment of time, energy and resources. This spring, our graduating students faced a campus closure amidst an unprecedented global health crisis. Their perseverance is truly inspiring, and we offer our deepest congratulations to the 2020 graduating class of M.A. and Ph.D. students, and to the families and friends who have supported them.

Message from the Director of Undergraduate Studies

We are honored to share this important day with the graduating class. Throughout these students' time at Carolina, we've witnessed their impressive intellectual and personal growth and have been privileged to be a part of their lives. Among their many accomplishments, four of our graduating students were inducted into the distinguished honors society, Phi Beta Kappa. Congratulations to Lisl Clair Eltschlager, Samuel Jacob Bible-Sullivan, Barron John Northrup, and Nicole Marie Saca. Michael Joseph Doucette Jr. received High Honors in Cultural Studies, and Jessie Noel Casimir earned High Honors in Communication. These extraordinary students are representative of the overall impressive character of this graduating class. Congratulations to the 2020 graduating class members and their families.
